We function best in groups when there is:
- Communication - This is the first CS class that has relied greatly on group work which means we may have forgotten the importance of communication when working in teams
- Effort - We want to understand both sides of our work and make sure we're not being lazy so we don't have to go back and make changes later.
- Open-mindedness - definitely super important to share any and all ideas we each have.
- attention to deadlines - We don't like scrambling at the last minute, so it's important we get it done with spare time before the deadline so we can make some last minute changes if needed.
- Discuss if someone makes changes to any parts of the document if we find something conflicting in either person's work.

I really hope our group can divide the work evenly but still have a say in every section of the project!

If we need to meet outside of class, we will communicate through direct message on discord.

Han will be responsible for final submission
